ABSTRACT

This document contains 49 pages of tables presenting data ranking schools' reading achievement in New York City. Scores are from the Degrees of Reading Power test administered in grades 3 to 10 in 1986. This report complies with the New York City Decentralization Law's requirement that each school be ranked by the percentage of pupils reading at or above grade level. Any school falling in the bottom 45 percent is allowed to hire its teaching personnel through alternative procedures. It is strongly suggested that these data alone not be used as a measure of school effectiveness, especially in terms of selecting a school. Reading grade level is defined as the median score, or fiftieth percentile, established by the test publisher. For each grade, this score divides the sample into an upper and lower half. To compute the school rank, the score of each student was compared with the grade level score from the test publisher's norms, and the number of students scoring at or above that point was determined. Data on limited English speaking students and results from the 1985 test, using the California Achievement Tests, are also included. (GDC)

I. INTRODUCTION

Purpose of Ranking

The 1986 school ranks report is issued to comply with the New York City School Decentralization Law's requirement that "each school shall be ranked in order of the percentage of pupils reading at or above grade level". This law further provides that any school falling in the bottom 45 percent of the ranking may hire its pedagogical personnel through "alternative procedures". Alternative procedures include, for example, being able to choose from among all applicants who passed the National Teachers Examination, as opposed to being restricted to those who have been certified by the New York City Board of Examiners. The original purpose of the annual school ranks report was to identify those low-achieving schools that would be allowed to use such procedures. The 1986 report continues to serve that purpose.

This is the seventeenth annual school ranks report. Over the years, the report has taken on a meaning beyond that envisioned in the decentralization law. For many people, the ranks report serves as the sole measure of the educational effectiveness of specific schools. This is unfortunate, since a school's rank on a standardized reading test is only one piece of data and must be interpreted in the context of other information about the school. For example, many community school districts designate one school as the district's center for intellectually gifted classes. Although such a placement decision is based on educational considerations, it has the added effect of raising that school's achievement level and rank while lowering the achievement levels and ranks of other schools that send their highest achieving students to that school. This effect can be seen in the 1986 ranking of intermediate and junior high schools: three of the schools ranked one through four in the city are magnet schools for their districts. On the other hand, some schools are centers for low-achieving or gates extension students, a situation which could adversely affect their ranks.

Even if a school's reading achievement data have not been affected by student placement policy, the school rank remains limited as a measure of school effectiveness. The Chancellor's Commission on Minimum Standards is currently preparing recommendations for a more comprehensive assessment of each school's performance. Schools will be assessed on factors including test scores in reading, mathematics, and writing, and student attendance and graduation rates, all of which will be interpreted in light of school variables such as mobility rate, staffing, and percentage of limited-English-proficient students. Until the Chancellor's assessment is available, we would especially urge those who rely on this report for help in the selection of schools for their children to look beyond these data for more meaningful information. The statistical information presented here is no substitute for first-hand impressions based upon a visit to a school and a discussion with the principal, teachers and parents.

Procedures

The 1986 school ranks report contains two separate rankings, one for the 613 elementary schools and one for the 179 intermediate and junior high schools in New York City. The ranks are based on the percentage of students in each school who were reading at or above grade level, as determined by the results of the Degrees of Reading Power (D.R.P.) test administered in May, 1986 to all eligible students in grades three through ten. Community school district students in grades three through nine are included in the ranking.

In past years, grade two students took the same test as students in the rest of the grades and were included in the ranking. However, because there is no D.R.P. for grade two, students in that grade took a different test in 1986. Because it would be unsound to combine results from different tests, grade two students were not included in the 1986 ranking, and schools which only have kindergarten through grade two are not included in the report.

Students included in the ranking were general education students, special education students in resource room programs, and limited-English-proficient (LEP) students who had been in an English-language school system for more than two years. LEP students who had been in an English-language school system for less than two years were excused from testing; they are, however, included in the reported results since they are presumed to score below grade level.

In 1986 the definition of LEP-excused was revised to be consistent with that used by the State Education Department. In previous years LEP students who had been in an English-language school system for less than one year were excused from testing.

Reading grade level is defined as the median score, or fiftieth percentile score, established by the test publisher through representative sampling. For each grade, this score is the point dividing the distribution of scores of the testing sample into an upper 50 percent and a lower 50 percent.

In order to compute the percentage of students reading at or above grade level in each school, the score of each student was compared with the grade level score from the test publisher's norms, and the number of students scoring at or above that point was determined. LEP-excused students were counted with students scoring below grade level. The formula for the computation is as follows:

School Ranks and Eligibility for Alternative Hiring Practices

In the rankings of elementary schools and intermediate and junior high schools, the school ranked first had the highest percentage of students reading at or above grade level, and the school ranked last had the lowest percentage. The solid line that appears in the body of a table separates the top 55 percent of the schools in the report from the bottom 45 percent. Any school within the lower 45 percent is eligible to hire its pedagogical personnel through alternative procedures. In all, 276 elementary schools and 81 intermediate and junior high schools were eligible to use alternative hiring procedures. (See Table 1.)

Eligible elementary schools had 66.4 percent or fewer students reading at or above grade level and eligible intermediate and junior high schools had 57.3 percent or fewer students reading at or above grade level. The citywide rankings are presented in Tables 2 and 4, and the rankings within each district are presented in Tables 3 and 5.

Additional Information

The citywide rankings contain some additional information. First, to permit comparison with the previous year's data, the 1985 rank and percentage of students at or above grade level are reported. It should be noted that the 1985 ranking was based on results of the California Achievement Test (CAT), which was the citywide reading test from 1978 to 1985. Besides the difference in test instrument, the 1985 ranking differed in the students who were included. In 1985, students in grades two through nine, as opposed to three through nine in 1986, were included. The definition of LEP-excused also changed from 1985 to 1986. Because of all these differences the 1985 and 1986 data are not directly comparable.

Another piece of information, which was included at the request of the Office of Bilingual Education, is the total percentage of LEP students in each school. The total number of LEP students was obtained from the 1986 Bilingual Education Student Information Survey (BESIS) and includes all LEP students whether or not they were excused from testing on the D.R.P. Finally, those schools serving as gates extension cluster sites are noted; these schools enroll low-achieving students from other schools.
